Side by side through life’s ups and downs
Together STRONG

Because with a little help, everything is possible.

It could be a best friend, a spouse, a sibling, or a staff member, but no matter what – at Beebe Healthcare’s Tunnell Cancer Center, you are not alone. This mentality is part of the fabric of team members and volunteers who spend their days here. It’s also the same mindset that will travel to the South Coastal Health Campus near Millville when the second cancer center opens in 2020.

Kindness never fades. For patients, knowing that staff and volunteers remember who they are and what they spoke about last time means something.

Sharing a cup of coffee might soothe a loved one’s stress as they watch chemotherapy begin.

Sheryl Miller always looked forward to telling the staff what restaurant she and her friend Blanche were going to try after each appointment. Ray Shaffer was so inspired by the thoughtfulness he received that he always made a point to give positive feedback and reach out to help others. These are just two examples of many at Tunnell Cancer Center that prove that togetherness makes us all stronger.

We hope these stories inspire or strengthen your resolve that a team approach is the best way to treat cancer – with doctors, staff, or at home. Each of the patients and companions in this calendar truly express the difference it made to have someone by their side.

That presence can make a difference every single day, and it proves that when people are together, they are at their strongest.

“When I was diagnosed, I was terrified. I was scared to leave the house or try new things. Through the diagnosis and treatment, I really found myself and I learned how strong I can be. My husband, Jay, has been with me every step of the way. He and the entire team at Tunnell Cancer Center have supported me and encouraged me.

“As I went through my treatments, they encouraged me to step out of my comfort zone, which led me to apply and get hired for a great position at Delaware Technical Community College. It’s the perfect job for me and I don’t know if I would have even tried for it before.

“We have also gotten back into bowling – a sport that initially brought us together when we were dating. I used to be afraid to be around people, but now I am happy to connect and share my story.

“I’ve found strength in meeting people and sharing our stories. I feel stronger and better than before. In many ways, I feel reborn and now I am able to live a happy, healthy life.”

New Year’s Day

Martin Luther King, Jr. Day
As the grandson of James Beebe, Ralph Williams joined the family legacy when he became a certified nurse anesthetist and returned to Lewes to work at Beebe. He retired after 30 years to enjoy time with his wife, Bonnie, and their children and grandchildren. He also wanted to spend more time with his church family at New Covenant Presbyterian Church in Lewes.

He was first diagnosed with chronic lymphocytic leukemia, which affects white blood cells. Two weeks later, during routine blood tests, it was discovered that he also had prostate cancer. “From that point on, a lot changed for us. We were never down and out because of our faith in God. So, we know God will get us through it – he’s never given up on us,” Ralph said.

“Throughout the treatments and tests, God was there. He put people in our lives when we needed it,” Bonnie said. “Dr. Peri was there for us at every turn,” Ralph said. “When a metastatic lesion was found on my spine, Dr. Peri jumped into the research and found a treatment for me. Dr. Costleigh was another who was right there when we needed him.

“As a nurse anesthetist, I’ve seen a lot of surgery, but I never really understood how surgery could knock you down. It was a long road to recovery. Through it all, my prayer warriors have been there for me.”

President’s Day
“A few years into retirement, I was just lumbering and laboring. After blood tests and a sample of bone marrow, the doctors were able to determine it was Waldenstrom macroglobulinemia, a type of non-Hodgkin’s lymphoma.

“Doctors determined my cancer was caused by Agent Orange, a defoliant used during the Vietnam War, which caused a lot of distress in my family. When I found this out over 40 years later, there was a little bit of shock factor because I was doing OK as a 40-, 50-, 60-year-old guy. My siblings didn’t take it as well as I did, but my wife has been my No. 1 supporter.

“Being a Christian, I’m aware that I need to give thanks for what I have. I always keep that in mind even now with my treatment.

“Dealing with my cancer has been almost inconsequential because whenever I was there, I was always thinking about how much the staff has to take care of so many people in my situation. I look at all of them as healers. The professionalism of the nurses, staff, and doctors, of everyone I’ve met – I make a point to give positive feedback.

“One of my biggest motivations to keep going is my granddaughter. It keeps me wanting to stay alive. She’s 6 years old, and I have to keep kicking until she knocks out all of her milestones.”
When Sheryl Miller started treatments for melanoma in May 2017, her father had just died of the same cancer. It was a series of events that could stagger anyone, especially someone as pessimistic as Sheryl, she admits. She decided to take a different viewpoint for this challenge, and a year later, the nodules and spots in her stomach, liver, pelvis, and lungs were gone. Because of her husband, three kids, six grandchildren, and best friends like Blanche Nickel, who was by her side for each treatment, Sheryl realized she had so much to live for.

“My husband and I went to get the results of the original scans, and we didn’t even talk to each other the whole way home. It was just shock,” Sheryl said.

“I’m usually a really anxious person and have always been that way – a pessimist. But I haven’t been with this because I feel that outlook is half the battle.

“I feel very blessed. Everyone at Tunnell is just wonderful. Just the encouragement helped. I feel now I have so much to live for. It’s been eye opening. It’s made me appreciate a lot more because you never know. You just don’t.

“Don’t block people out. If someone wants to help you, let them. Let them be there to do so. I feel that my relationship with Blanche has gotten stronger. I don’t look at her like a friend. I look at her like a sister. Keep your family and friends close because they want to help. I’m a strong person, but you can’t always be strong. Let them help you.”

Meghan Morgan was not expecting cancer to be a part of her story. “It was absolutely shocking because I had previous clear mammograms and no problems at all. My sister had an issue with a mammogram, so I was thinking when I went for the biopsy that it was going be just like hers – a cyst with fluid. When it was more than that, I started to get a little worried, and then I got the call.”

Meghan’s husband, Tony, daughter, Autumn, and grandson, Lincoln, as well as many others, rallied around her. Tony took six months off of work, and Autumn made sure she did whatever she could for her mom, while working and raising Lincoln, who Meghan was still determined to babysit.

“My family has been super helpful. After my chemotherapy, I rang the bell, and Tony had a surprise luncheon at DiFebo’s with all of my neighbors and friends. That was really nice – their positive energy has helped me, and then Lincoln really helped me push through. I have to do it for Lincoln.”

Being on the receiving end of help was different for Meghan. She was used to being the helper. “I was a social worker, so it was very hard to let go and let others help me because who I am is helping other people, not people helping me.

“Now, I tell everybody my story. I say, ‘Make sure you get your mammogram.’ My friend from high school hadn’t had one in seven years. My diagnosis devastated her, and I’m happy to say she went and got her mammogram.”
Before John was diagnosed with stage 4 metastatic bone cancer, John and Sharon Bezak had already been through one cancer diagnosis. Through it all, they’ve been together strong for 51 years and counting. Now they’re able to spend time with their seven grandkids and neighborhood friends.

SHARON: “When they said the intravenous chemo was not working, I panicked. ‘We’re going to see somebody else.’ Not that I didn’t trust them, I just said, ‘Can I get a second opinion?’ Because we had been doing fine, so all of a sudden I panicked. So we got an appointment at Johns Hopkins.

“[The doctor] was excellent. He said, ‘Why do you want to be here? Tunnell Cancer Center is excellent. Whatever they’re doing for you there, I would do for you here, but you’ve got to drive for two hours.’ He raved about the Tunnell Cancer Center and told me not to worry.”

JOHN: “Tunnell Cancer Center staff treat you like, I don’t know, it’s different from other hospitals we’ve been in. You’re not a number. You feel like you’re somebody, like you’re recognized. They know you – not as a number, but as a person. You get to talk to them about what they’ve done, what we’re doing. You know our grandkids are coming down, we talk about that, and we joke. It’s a good feeling knowing that that’s all happening.”

“You go on with life. We just keep going together.”

Judy Hrin, her sister, Sandy, and her close friend and neighbor, Dana, enjoy letting off steam, especially if there is a view of the water.

“The water calms me, while my family and friends give me support,” Judy said.

During Judy’s treatments, Sandy and Dana, along with Judy’s other sister, Carol, became a close-knit team. They took turns driving her to appointments and took special pride in making her laugh.

“I guess I’ve always been the serious one. Dana is the jokester and Sandy is Miss Sunshine – always a positive attitude,” Judy said. “I really depended on them and on Carol, who lives in Pennsylvania, for a lot during my treatment. We got to know each other on an even deeper level.”

Judy even found a positive attitude inside herself. “I am definitely more positive now than I have ever been. I found my strength inside and through the connection with my friends and family. And now, I’m more focused on being around others and giving back.”

Judy volunteers at Tunnell now in hopes of providing the support to others that she received during her treatment.

“Volunteering makes me happy. I am very grateful for my friends and my family who were there for me. Their support is just what I needed. I hope to be there for others who are going through the same journey that I’ve been on.”

Independence Day [observed]
Independence Day
When Bruce Frankum was diagnosed with cancer in March 2017, his wife, Patty, said, “What do we have to do? Let’s do it. Get it done.” Together, they pulled their collective strength, with a little help from their dog, Lucy. Whether it was shots or trips to chemotherapy, Bruce and Patty were in it together.

“From the get go, when it was diagnosed, it was quite a shock to hear that,” Bruce said. “I know [Patty] was quite upset that day. We didn’t dwell on it. We both are fighters and just went from the get go with that mentality. We kind of always take what comes and deal with it. I think we do feed off each other and lean on each other more than anyone else [around us]. I don’t know if I would say it made it us stronger because we were already strong anyway, but it definitely helped having her by my side going through the process.

“The doctor said, ‘You can come back in six months if you want to, but I don’t need to see you for a year.’ That was a good feeling when we knew that things were [trending positive]... some people have the bone marrow transplants and they don’t really take. That was a good feeling.”
Mike and Debbie Burns were enjoying retired life in Lewes when fatigue started to disrupt Mike’s daily routine. After tests, diagnosis, and treatment, Mike wants everyone to know: “You don’t get through this alone.”

“I just can’t say enough about Dr. Desai, the nurses, and the infusion center nurses. The second time I walked in there, Candi at the front desk knew my name. I couldn’t believe it.

‘My attitude toward this whole thing is that it is what it is. Getting over the shock of it, I just said, ‘I’m going to deal with today and tomorrow and not worry about yesterday.’ I talked to a lot of people about that, and you don’t get through these kinds of things alone. It was a team of people. My family, my wife, and our neighbors – I can’t believe the encouragement I received, or the number of cards and phone calls. I just thought, ‘I’m going to battle this,’ and listened to what I was told to do. I did go for a second opinion early on with Johns Hopkins and they concurred with everything going on here at Beebe.

“I felt very confident with all the care I received. I just can’t say enough about the Tunnell Cancer Center. I’m humbled by it all, and I’m grateful for where I am today. It’s just hard to believe.”

DEBBIE:
“The doctor at Johns Hopkins said: ‘Go back to Lewes and keep up with what they are doing because it’s exactly what I would be doing, which was so reassuring.’”

Being diagnosed with cancer can cause life to feel upside down. For Bridget Buckaloo, a nurse and the executive director of Beebe’s Women’s and Children’s Health, she can say in a word how she felt – shocked.

“My shock over the diagnosis turned quickly into determination. I went into warrior mode, and was determined to give everything I had to overcoming this diagnosis and to continue living my life.

“I've learned through the diagnosis, treatment, and surgery not to take any of life's little moments for granted. As the mother of triplets, it was important to me to maintain a positive attitude. I wanted to focus my energy on my health and their health. Their coping was dependent on my coping. I did not want them to be afraid. So, it was critical for me to keep going with a positive attitude. I wanted to focus on what was good in the moment.

“I've been able to find reasons for gratitude through it all and that keeps me strong – gratitude for my children and my family, gratitude for an incredible ‘life hostage’ who held my hand and went to treatments, gratitude for my team at Beebe, and gratitude for my doctors.

“I am grateful that I have the Tunnell Cancer Center in my backyard. With all of their experience and compassion, I know I am in good hands. They are an amazing team.

“I have learned more about my own strength through this, and I have learned how important it is to remain positive by focusing on joy and gratitude, not stress.”

Columbus Day

For as long as he can remember, Russ Baker has been a morning person.

“I just wake up excited each day. I’ve always had a positive outlook,” Russ said.

But, when he was diagnosed with lung cancer, it threw him for a loop.

“I had no idea what to expect. It was scary. I felt some of that joy slipping.”

Three months into his treatment, his mother was also diagnosed with cancer.

“She was the one I turned to, then when she was diagnosed, I had to be there for her. I found that helping her was helping me get back that positive spirit.”

In addition, when times were difficult, Russ turned to his care team.

“Michele Fletcher, my nurse and my go-to person, was always there for me. We would talk, she would give me advice and encouragement, and we would just laugh. It was exactly what I needed.

“For treatments, you could be there several hours, and each time, I looked forward to the amazing support I received from Michele and the team at Tunnell.”

Russ added, “At Tunnell, I received the best care from the best people. I got great news recently and am cancer-free. It might be unusual, but I look at this as a blessing – I got to meet Michele and many great people during my treatments.”

Michele was humbled by Russ’s words and said, “I always think of it as their journey and I’m here to make it the best journey possible.”
Carol and her husband, EJ, moved to Delaware 10 years ago. Like many new residents, they were still traveling to see some of their doctors in the Philadelphia area and in New Jersey.

When Carol started getting sick – her blood counts were alarming – she and EJ talked to friends and family about what options they might have for treatment.

“Many of our friends encouraged us to go to specialists in other states and I had planned to do that,” Carol said. “That was until I met the doctors and care team at Tunnell Cancer Center. They were so welcoming and had a great plan for my treatment. I knew I would be more comfortable staying here, closer to home, and I was so right.

“My family came and visited and met the team and they told me that I had made the right decision.

“Everyone at Beebe and Tunnell gave me all the support I needed. I knew I would have the support of EJ and my family, but I never expected to feel so loved and supported by the cancer team.”

Today, Carol and EJ share their story with new and old friends alike. They continue to support each other and enjoy going out to dinner at our many local restaurants.

“I find we are always talking to others about our great experience and care at Tunnell,” Carol said. “There’s no reason to travel for great care when we already have this amazing team of caretakers here.”
